Amy focuses her practice on class action litigation, and consumer protection matters in particular. She has litigated a wide range of product liability, design defect, employment, and food labelling cases in courts throughout the country. Amy has served in various leadership positions in national class actions in an indication of the respect she enjoys among the judiciary and her peers including in matters against General Mills and Woodgrain Millwork Company. She has considerable familiarity with a range of unfair competition laws, and has offered extensive commentary concerning proposed changes to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as Chair of the Chicago Bar Association's Class Action Committee and Co-Chair of the American Bar Association's Section of Litigation Rule 23 Subcommittee.

In 2016, Amy was elected to the Board of Directors of the Public Justice Foundation, a nationwide 501(c)3 charitable organization supporting the pursuit of high-impact lawsuits to combat social and economic injustice, protect the Earth's sustainability, and challenge predatory corporate conduct and government abuses. Since 2009, Amy has served on the Board of the Chicago Art Deco Society, where she founded the Preservation Committee and currently serves as the Executive Vice President and Director of Preservation Advocacy. In addition to her civic involvement, Amy is a cast member, writer, and dancer in the Chicago Bar Association's Bar Show, and recently celebrated her seventh year in the 93 year-old Chicago tradition.
